I Hope You Enjoy Our Nudes from the Past!

When I look at these images, I'm very sad because I know they are resting in peace now, but still it's very sad. I have always enjoyed looking at vintage photos. I also like to go to old graveyards and read the dates on the grave stones. It all makes me sad...

In today's society with its half-naked poster girls, the unclothed body in art is not so unusual. But in Victorian England the situation was quite different, as an exhibit at the Munich House of Art shows. They splash around innocently in pastoral streams, lounge coyly on velvet divans, and wrestle wild animals in the nude.

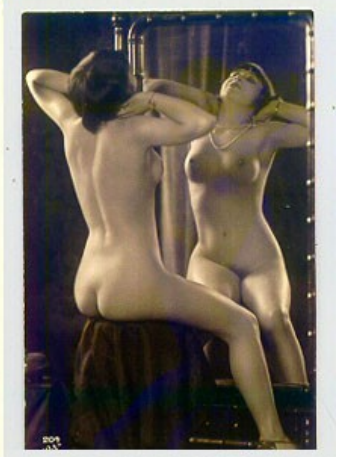

From nymphs to fairies, goddesses and Greek athletes, the subjects vary, but the intent stays the same: reveal the natural beauty of the human body without the stifling garments of everyday Victorian life.

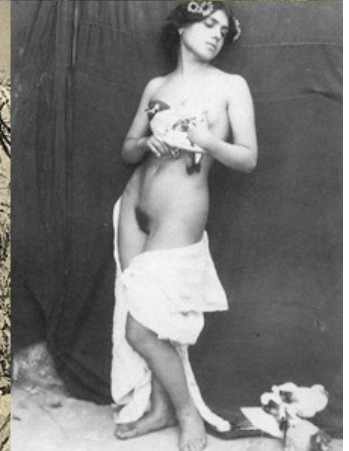

Contemporary visitors to the Munich House of Art's newest exhibit "Exposed: the Victorian Nude" will hardly be riled by the subject matter. After the last hundred years of developments in art and morality, nothing should be surprising any more.

Now days nudity is looked upon as the everyday norm. I see younger and younger girls trying to show as much skin as possible. I was at a church picnic walking through the booths, and I saw behind one of the booths, a couple of very young girls changing clothes. I noticed they were putting on skimpy outfits and I know their mother would not approve, so they change after they leave home. I would have never let my girls do that and they would not have done that because they were raised better.

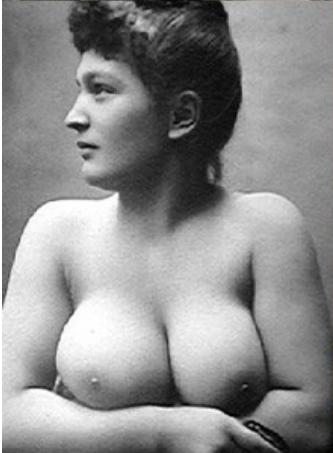

I'm not bashing anyone just voicing my opinion.
